Myles Cooper

I was born in Southland in late 1968 and raised in various cities of New Zealand as my family slowly moved North until settling in Auckland when I was 10. I attended high school at both Kelston Boys and Orewa College before entering the workforce at age 16. Four years later I began a Greenfield's rubbish company in the North of Auckland which grew over a 10 year period at which stage I sold the business to Envirowaste Services Ltd (a Fulton Hogan company). One of the sale conditions required me to assist with the merging of my operation into ESL, during this time I was offered and took up the position of North Island Manager for Envirowaste – a position I held for two years. From Envirowaste I moved to Aquiline Holdings Ltd (Jim Scott) as a General Manager, where I ran two medium sized businesses, each for approximately twelve months, and in October 2005 that position was made redundant as part of a major downsizing by the Company.

Since joining the BMC in 2006 I have been focussing on import and distribution companies, using my sales and general management experience to help them solidify and grow their businesses and I play a leading role in the BMC's investment banking function. I live near Warkworth with my wife and five children and other than the BMC, devote myself to coaching the local childrens soccer teams and emptying my cellar of wine.
